WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP) — President Reagan said today that his Administration was obligated by law to prosecute anyone, including reporters, who make information public that who make information public that could harm national security.

Mr. Reagan, in a photo session, was asked whether he agreed with William J. Casey, the Director of Central Intelligence, that members of the news media should be prosecuted for leaks.

media should be prosecuted for leaks.

"It isn't a case of what we may think about it," he replied. "There is a law that was passed, I believe it was 1954, that's very specific and not just about the media. It's about anyone who makes public information which could be dangerous to our national security. And I would think that all of us are bound by that law."

And I would think that all of us are bound by that law."

He apparently was referring to a 1950 law against "publishing any classified information concerning the communications intelligence activities of the United States."
